The University as an Institution Today

Topics for reflection

by Alfonso Borrero Cabal

IDRC and Unesco

January 1994

xxiv + 239 pp., 5¾ x 8¾

0-88936-685-3

CA $24.00, US $17.95

From its medieval origins to the present day, the university has played a key role in developing and perpetuating human knowledge. But at the end of the 20th century, after 40 years of rapid expansion, institutions of higher education worldwide are facing major financial constraints.

In The University as an Institution Today, author Alfonso Borrero Cabal argues that the university administration must reflect a specific goal and vision for the institution. Once a university allows itself to become an "indifferent reflection of political or market forces," he argues, it not only loses its academic autonomy, it also does a disservice to society.

Borrero Cabal traces the origins of the university concept, its contribution to society, and its current state. He examines the university's missions, functions, and objectives; its philosophy as an institution; its structures; and its service to culture and the professions.

The University as an Institution Today is an all-encompassing study of universities, setting out guidelines for assessing the efficiency of the university's institutional structure. The analysis is strongly supported by historical and theoretical background material and includes concrete suggestions for organization, evaluation, and planning.

The Author

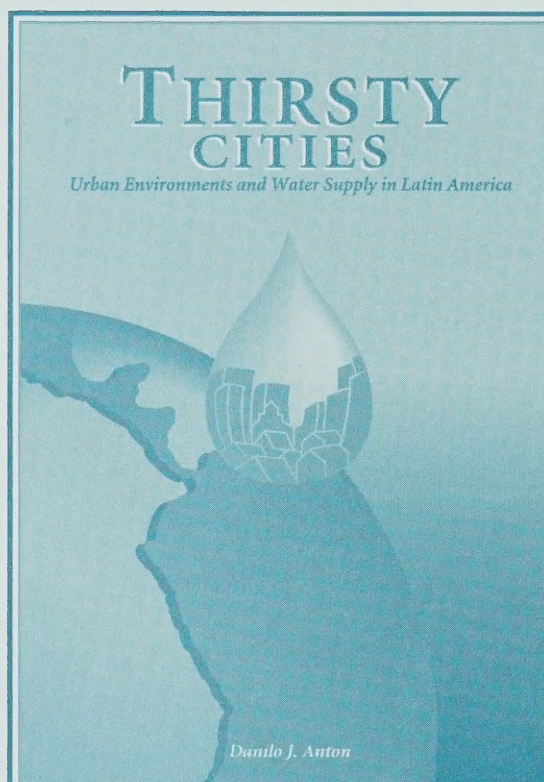

Alfonso Borrero Cabal, S.J. is a philosopher, theologian, historian, and teacher. He directs the Colombian Association of Universities, its Permanent Symposium on University, and the journal Mundo Universitaria.

Thirsty Cities

Urban environments and water supply in Latin America

by Danilo J. Anton

IDRC recently published
iv + 197 pp., 6¾ x 9¾
0-88936-666-7
CA $19.95, US $14.95

Many cities in Latin America and the Caribbean are experiencing water crises — crises compounded by their growing populations.

Because the shortage of water is a complex issue of both supply and demand, solutions must involve more than simply finding additional water supplies. Crises can only be handled through better management of urban development.

In Thirsty Cities, author Danilo J. Anton examines the water situation in a selection of Latin America cities, focusing on several aspects — dependence on surface water, groundwater contamination, the inadequacies of distribution systems, and the policies governing water usage. Through various examples, Anton demonstrates that solutions must address environmental, demographic, legal, political, and behavioural issues.

Thirsty Cities shows that equitable and sustainable water systems can only be created when all issues of urban development have been taken into account.

The Author

Danilo J. Anton, a Uruguayan-Canadian geographer with more than 25 years' experience in the environmental field, has managed research projects in more than 30 countries. His work has dealt with desertification problems in sub-Saharan Africa, environmental problems of the Third World megapolises, and the development of nontraditional water sources, such as snow and ice in Pakistan and coastal fogs in Chile and Peru.

A video entitled Thirsty Cities, which complements the book, is available through the National Film Board of Canada.

Cities Feeding People

An examination of urban agriculture in East Africa

by Axumite G. Egziabher, Diana Lee-Smith, Daniel G. Maxwell, Pyar Ali Memon, Luc Mougeot, and Camillus J. Sawio

Cities Feeding People

An Examination of Urban Agriculture
in East Africa

IDRC April 1994
ca 120 pp., 5¼ x 8¾
0-88936-706-X
CA $14.95, US $10.95

For the urban poor of the South, food is becoming a prohibitively expensive commodity. By the late 1980s, cities of the developing world were required to import half of their food supply.

Urban agriculture, it is argued, can reduce this dependency. But most Southern governments do not support it.

Cities Feeding People examines urban agriculture in East Africa and proves that it is a safe, clean, and secure method to feed the world's struggling urban residents. It also collapses the myth that urban agriculture is practiced only by the poor and unemployed.

Cities Feeding People provides the hard facts needed to convince governments that urban agriculture should have a larger role in feeding the urban population.

Measuring the Impact of Information on Development

edited by Michel J. Menou

IDRC January 1994
xiii + 188 pp., 5¼ x 8¼
0-88936-708-6
CA $24.95, US $18.95

Information — What does it mean to society? How do we benefit from it? In the developing world, where access to information technology is still limited, what impact does information have? Most people would agree that information can and does have a positive effect on society, but can this be proven?

With shrinking dollars available for collecting and managing information, particularly in the developing world, there is increasing pressure to prove the value of information investments. Key information specialists from around the world analyzed this issue — through face-to-face discussion and the first-ever international computer conference on the subject.

This book documents the discussions of these experts and their suggested approaches for proving that information does have an impact, whether it be to save money, save lives, or empower people. It offers a comprehensive review of all the issues associated with Measuring the Impact of Information on Development.

The Editor

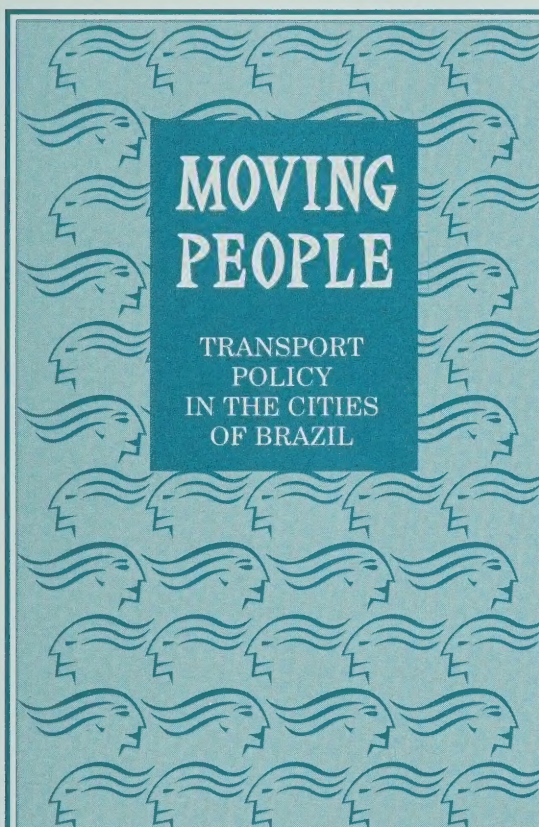

As editor, Michel J. Menou compiled and assessed expert opinion and information from the literature to produce this book. Throughout his career in information sciences, Mr Menou has been active in developing national and international information systems, formulating information policies, designing educational programs, and training information users in some 60 countries. He is currently a private consultant in information management systems.

IDRC March 1994
ca 190 pp., 5¼ x 8¼
0-88936-658-6
CA $24.95, US $18.95

Moving People is the first English-language book to address the increasing important problems associated with urban passenger transport in Latin America. The authors concentrate on Brazilian cities but explore environmental and financial issues that are of growing concern throughout the world.

The book reviews various elements that must be considered when designing appropriate policy for passenger transportation, including demand, congestion, socioeconomic equity, environmental and energy impacts, pricing, and finance. It also focuses on the importance of modal choice, system integration, regulation, and ownership.

Moving People is an excellent reference tool for urban transport planners and for people interested in the energy and environmental impacts of urban transport policy.

Cultural Expression in the Global Village

edited by David Nostbakken and Charles Morrow

IDRC and Southbound, recently released
iii + 188 pp., 6¼ x 9½

The 1992 Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro called for new and innovative uses of the mass media to bring about a global understanding of the critical issues facing our planet as it approaches the 21st century. But will advances in communications technology help liberate individual and societal cultural expression for positive ends? Or will the media serve only as a form of manipulation and cultural repression?

This anthology draws upon papers presented at a symposium on communications and development that preceded the 1992 Conference of the International Institute of Communications in Montréal, Canada. The participants suggest innovative ways to redress the balance in access to the means of communication, particularly television.

The Editors

David Nostbakken is Chairman of Canada's Vision TV and Executive Director of the WETV venture, which is based at the International Development Research Centre in Ottawa.

Charles Morrow is a former Director of Information of the World Health Organization.

Energy Research in Developing Countries

edited by Stephen Graham

IDRC February 1994
xiv + 302 pp., 5¼ x 8¼
0-88936-709-4
CA $24.95, US $18.95

During the past few years, not much has been said about energy. Recently, however, this topic has been heating up, although the discussion is no longer focused on the fear of energy shortages. Today, pollution and excessive energy use are primarily responsible for many of our environmental problems, including acid rain and global warming.

Energy Research in Developing Countries summarizes the 14-volume Energy Research Group (ERG) series, which is copublished by IDRC, United Nations University, and Wiley Eastern, India. The series discusses energy technologies and options, and provides a solid knowledge base for making decisions about effective approaches to energy and development. The wide range of topics include bioenergy, industrial energy use, and how developing countries are satisfying energy demand.

Energy Research in Developing Countries helps readers to better understand the wide range of energy sources and uses, particularly from the perspective of the developing world. It is a convenient guide to the problems and solutions found in each of the 14 volumes, and includes enough detail to enable readers to identify options and make comparisons.

The Editor

Stephen Graham's experience and interests combine engineering with social science capabilities. As a professional engineer with a graduate degree in environmental studies, he has more than a decade of experience consulting in energy planning and policy, energy system design, feasibility and economic analysis, and on issues related to international development and the environment.

Laying the Foundation

The institutions of knowledge in developing countries

edited by Benjamín Alvarez and Hernando Gómez

IDRC June 1994
xiii + 215 pp., 5¼ x 8¼
0-88936-684-5
CA $21.95, US $16.95

Laying the Foundation identifies the techniques that have proven to be most successful at increasing the efficiency of research institutions in the developing world. The contributing authors analyze the factors linked to the success or failure of an institution and provide criteria for evaluating an institution's effectiveness.

Laying the Foundation focuses on case studies of research institutions in the South; but its message is relevant throughout the world. From the research laboratory to the museum, the book responds to the following questions: What is the right institutional configuration to promote the development of science and technology? How can existing institutions enhance their efficiency? How can we foster competitiveness needed to expand the frontiers of knowledge and make better use of research results?

Laying the Foundation will be of special interest to policymakers, funding agencies, researchers, and administrators in science and technology.

The Editors

The CGNET Story

A case study of international computer networking

by Georg Lindsey, Ken Novak, Selçuk Ozgediz, and David Balson

IDRC January 1994
xxii + 127 pp., 5¼ x 8¼
0-88936-678-0
CA $16.95, US $12.95

A quick and reliable exchange of information among individuals, organizations, and countries is the purpose of CGNET and a key to international development.

When it was first created in the 1980s, CGNET — the computer-based communication network of the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research — was a ground-breaking achievement. It was the first data-communication network of this scale in the development research community, opening up access to information vital for timely and accurate decisions.

Using a case-study format, the authors combine their collective experience to describe the development of the CGNET communication network and related technology. They discuss its origin, functions, and operational requirements and describe how people in remote centres in developing countries use CGNET.

The CGNET Story: A Case Study of International Computer Networking shows the power of electronic communication and provides a comprehensive account of how it can be established internationally.

The Authors

Georg Lindsey is the President of CGNET Services International, Menlo Park, CA, USA.

Ken Novak is also with CGNET Services International, Menlo Park, CA, USA.

Selçuk Ozgediz is a Management Advisor to the CGIAR Secretariat in Washington, DC, USA.

Defining Critical Mass

The case in animal research

edited by Doug Daniels and Barry Nestel

IDRC recently published
 ix + 61 pp., 5½ x 8½
 0-88936-649-7
 CA $7.95, US $5.95

Many existing research programs may be too small to produce useful results. This is the conclusion suggested by livestock and information specialists who met in Costa Rica to discuss critical mass — the minimum level of resources needed for effective research activities. Defining Critical Mass is the record of that event and provides the first systematic investigation to identify resource requirements in animal research.

Editors Doug Daniels and Barry Nestel present comprehensive guidelines for establishing the minimum resource levels required to successfully undertake animal research programs. Among their discussions are budget, staffing ratio, salary level, training, and ethical considerations.

Defining Critical Mass provides insights into better management of research resources, which could lead to major changes in the funding and organization of research.

The Editors

Doug Daniels is currently Special Advisor on Eastern Europe to the President of IDRC.

Barry Nestel is Senior Research Officer with the International Service for National Agriculture Research in the The Hague, Netherlands.

Induced Breeding in Tropical Fish Culture

Induced breeding in tropical fish culture

Brian Harvey and J. Carolsfeld

IDRC recently published
xii + 144 pp., 5½ x 8½
0-88936-633-0
CA $14.95, US $10.95

During the past decade, our knowledge of social and environmental cues in fish reproduction has advanced steadily; at the same time, methods for hormone-induced reproduction of fish have become more refined.

In Induced Breeding in Tropical Fish Culture, authors Brian Harvey and J. Carolsfeld summarize the current understanding of hormonal triggers and examine how this knowledge is used to manipulate reproduction in captive fish that are grown for food.

In the second part of the book, the authors begin to explore the advantages of simulating environments to encourage reproduction. By learning more about these cues, it may be possible to move away from the traditional intrusive methods of hormones and thus reduce the concerns associated with anaesthesia, fertilization technique and choice of hormone.

The challenge, they caution, is to balance the cost of creating "natural" environments versus the effectiveness of hormones.

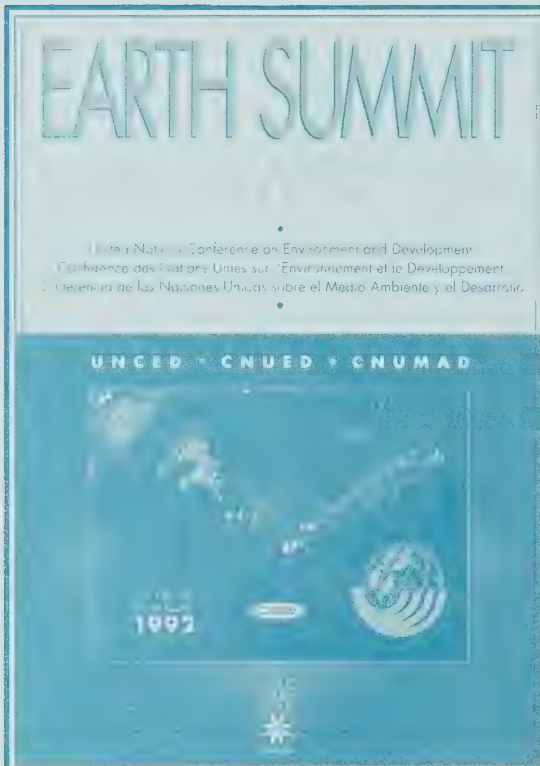

The Authors

Brian Harvey and J. Carolsfeld are international experts in tropical fish culture, with more than four decades combined experience with the theoretical and practical aspects of control of reproduction in fishes.

Brian Harvey is with MTL Biotech Ltd in Victoria, BC, Canada. J. Carolsfeld is with the Department of Biology at the University of Victoria, Victoria, BC, Canada.

Research on Social Policy: Proposals for a Future Agenda

edited by Mario Torres

This book breaks new ground in defining social policy research and suggesting new research priorities and approaches for sustainable and equitable development. It shows how to organize a research agenda on social policy under limited financial and human resources. Three typical cases are detailed: Chile, the innovator in the region; Colombia, beginning its strategy during a time of political and social violence and economic growth; and Peru, where the agenda for social policy has been mismanaged.

The Editor

Mario Torres is the Regional Program Officer for IDRC's Social Policy Program in Latin America. As editor, he has successfully compiled a collection of rich and varied articles by some of the most respected leaders in social research and policymaking in South America.

This book presents a comprehensive review of social policy development in five Asian countries: China, Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand, and Vietnam. Current issues, priorities, and methodologies in social policy research and development are identified, and the sectoral nature of social policy research in Asia is discussed. The book also assesses the opportunities for participatory social planning, which are often constrained by widespread poverty and class differences.

The Author

Trinidad S. Osteria, received her Doctor of Science in Demography from Johns Hopkins University in 1971. She has worked at Harvard University, as a Special Consultant for the United Nations, and at the Institute of Developing Economics in Tokyo. 101 Technologies

From the South for the South

In 101 Technologies, the International Development Research Centre features 20 years of research conducted by many of the South's most innovative scientists.

The book, which is a collection of fact sheets, details hard technologies, such as solar-powered desalinators and dehullers, and soft technologies, such as rural information and training services. Each fact sheet describes the technology, how it was developed, where, and why, prerequisites, and potential users. As well, it includes contact names.

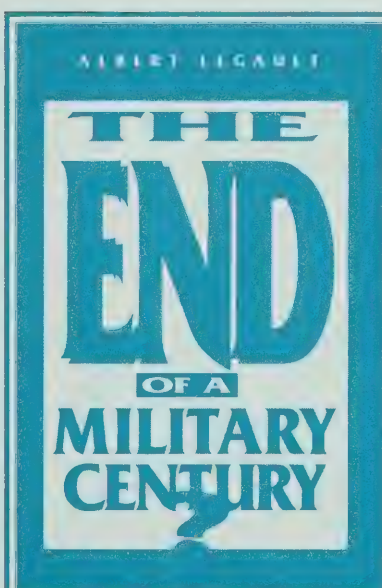

101 Technologies is an excellent reference on appropriate technology in the fields of agriculture, education, environment, information, health, and communications.

The End of a Military Century?

by Albert Legault

In The End of a Military Century?, Albert Legault challenges the acceptance of war as a legitimate expression of conflict and advocates global responsibility to increase the chances of survival for our planet. He breaks new ground by blending various schools of thought to propose a triadic model of international relations: "peace by might," "peace by right," and a "transsystemic" model that calls for development in harmony with nature.

Using empirical data, the author reveals the economic consequences of war and gives a new direction to the ethical debate as it sheds light on the changing relationship between science and society.

Albert Legault is a renowned authority on foreign policy and conflict analysis. He currently directs the International Peace and Security Research Program at the Quebec Centre for International Relations (Laval University).

Agenda 21 Books

The choices made today will determine the future of the planet. To help guide those choices, world leaders from the Rio Earth Summit developed Agenda 21 — the global action plan for sustainable development.

IDRC, an Agenda 21 organization, has produced three documents to help explain this action plan and its implications.

The Developing Countries in World Trade

Policies and bargaining strategies

edited by Diana Tussie and David Glover

As the world trading system changes, a more pragmatic and flexible approach to trade relations is needed.

This is the conclusion from a series of studies documented in The Developing Countries in World Trade. The studies highlight how changing trade policy and performance have affected developing countries, focusing on the importance of bargaining strategies and coalitions.

The Developing Countries in World Trade is the result of a 2-year research project coordinated by the editors Diana Tussie and David Glover with contributions from the following chapter authors: Diana Tussie, David Glover, Marcelo de Paiva Abreu, Stephany Griffith-Jones, Alejandro Jara, Rajiv Kumar, Ennio Rodríguez, Claudia Schatan, and Ann Weston.

Traditional Ecological Knowledge

Concepts and cases

edited by Julian T. Inglis

Although the term "traditional ecological knowledge" (TEK) only came into use in the 1980s, TEK represents experience acquired over thousands of years of direct human contact with the environment. It is little wonder then that this knowledge can make a major contribution to sustainable development.

The book Traditional Ecological Knowledge is a collection of papers from an international conference on common property and represents a wide range of perspectives on the nature of TEK. Through the discussion of topics such as community-based resource management, native land use and common property, the book's contributors explore and confirm that TEK is essential for the survival of our severely disrupted global environments.

Editor Julian T. Inglis has spent more than 25 years working in the environment and development field. He currently is executive director of the International Program on Traditional Ecological Knowledge at the Canadian Museum of Nature.

Contributors include Fikret Berkes, Lloyd W. Binder, Nancy C. Doubleday, Einar Eythorsson, Brian Fleming, Bruce Hanbridge, Carl Hrenchuk, Robert E. Johannes, André Lalonde, Miriam McDonald, Douglas J. Nakashima, Kenneth Ruddle, Terry Tobias, Peter J. Usher, and Robert Wavy.

A New Kind of Sharing

Why we can't ignore global environmental change

by June D. Hall and Arthur J. Hanson

Canada has much to be proud of. Yet, our advantaged position cannot shield us from the realities of poverty, environmental degradation, and conflict in the developing countries.

A New Kind of Sharing examines many of the issues discussed at the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, highlighting their implications for Canadians. It explores some of the greatest challenges facing Canada today, demonstrating the need for cooperation between the North and South.

June D. Hall, who has an academic and research background in international development and biological sciences, has worked as a research associate at the School for Resource and Environmental Studies, Dalhousie University, Halifax.

Arthur J. Hanson is an internationally respected authority on the issues and policies of environment and development. Currently, he is president and CEO of the International Institute for Sustainable Development in Winnipeg.

For Earth's Sake

A report from the Commission on Developing Countries and Global Change

Poverty, inequality, dependency: catalysts of the economic and social malaise of the Third World. Global warming, ozone depletion, the vanishing rain forests: images of a planet-wide crisis in our environment. Is there a connection?

Yes. The real solution to the global environmental crisis lies in eradicating poverty and inequality. It lies in democratic decision-making, and the effective transfer of appropriate knowledge systems and technologies. Northern concerns continue to dominate the environmental agenda. But the voice of the South must be heard. Global warming and the loss of biological diversity have little meaning for people suffering daily from starvation, malnutrition, or lack of basic health care. Southern priorities, such as resource degradation, pollution, and natural disasters, are immediate issues of life and death. They are global problems demanding global resolution.

For Earth's Sake opens a discussion that could change the environmental agenda into a global action plan for equity and sustainable development.

The Commission comprises the following seven eminent social scientists: Anil Agarwal (India), Julia Carabias (Mexico), Martin Khor Kok Peng (Malaysia), Adolfo Mascarenhas (Tanzania), Thandika Mkandawire (Senegal), Alvaro Soto (Colombia), and Erna Witoelar (Indonesia).

Poles Apart

Winners and losers in the history of human development

by Alastair M. Taylor and Angus M. Taylor

The North. The South. The industrialized world. The developing world.

In Poles Apart, we are reminded that the planet's polarization into South and North was not happenstance. Alastair and Angus Taylor provide a sweeping historical overview of Northern and Southern society from the Stone Age to the Space Age. They trace the complexity of North-South interaction and the emergence of today's economic, environmental, and technological inequities.

We are now at a crucial juncture: every society and culture is under intense scrutiny and is undergoing a radical metamorphosis. We cannot deny the current disparities and the fact that humanity is poles apart. Only a global solution will shape an equitable world — a world of ecological and societal sustainability.

Alastair M. Taylor is a renowned specialist in history, international relations and organization, and general systems theory.

Angus M. Taylor's principal areas of expertise include social and political thought, the philosophy of history, and the interrelations of science, nature, and society.

Lore

Capturing traditional environmental knowledge

edited by Martha Johnson

In recent years, a lot of research has been conducted on traditional knowledge of indigenous peoples, and particularly their traditional environmental knowledge. But to be useful for comparisons and developing policies, this anecdotal information should be catalogued.

Researchers from around the world met in Canada's Northwest Territories to discuss effective methods of documenting and applying traditional environmental knowledge through community-based research.

Lore is a record of that event. It examines the problems associated with documenting traditional knowledge and it explores some of the means by which traditional knowledge can be integrated with Western science to improve methods of natural resource management.

Editor, Martha Johnson holds degrees in Environmental Studies and Anthropology and has worked extensively in Canada's North.

Impact of Pesticide Use on Health in Developing Countries

Proceedings of a symposium held in Ottawa, Canada, 17–20 September 1990

edited by G. Forget, T. Goodman, and A. de Villiers.

Pesticides — they have helped to increase agriculture productivity and fight endemic diseases. But, they also have been blamed for 2 million cases of poisoning a year, 20 000 of which have resulted in death.

This book discusses how we might deal with this health hazard. It begins with a brief survey of the global situation and the results of 12 epidemiologic studies conducted by researchers in Africa, Asia, Latin America, and the Middle East. Then it illustrates how the development processes of pesticides (such as spraying techniques and legislation) can affect the health of workers. Lastly, the book discusses the vital role of information and health services in the prevention of pesticide poisonings.

Impact of Pesticide Use on Health in Developing Countries provides a detailed discussion on the impact of pesticides and provides options to ensure safer pesticide use.

Les organismes de développement ont depuis plusieurs années reconnu que l'égalité réelle entre les hommes et les femmes est essentielle au développement durable et équitable. Mais il ne s'agit pas seulement de faire des efforts dans le sens de l'intégration économique des femmes. En fait, le problème n'est ni économique, ni exclusif aux femmes. Il est plutôt dû aux rapports entre hommes et femmes, dans la mesure où il s'agit de rapports entre dominants et dominées.

Telle est la perspective de l'ouvrage issu de l'Atelier international sur les femmes et le développement, tenu en 1991 à l'Université Laval. Puisant aux différentes sources du féminisme mais aussi dans la pratique et dans l'action, les auteures ici réunies proposent des réflexions, des études et des analyses qui remettent en question l'idéologie courante qui détermine les politiques de développement visant les femmes.

Diplômée en anthropologie de la City University of New York en 1982, Marie France Labrecque est professeure titulaire à l'Université Laval. Elle dirige actuellement une recherche participative qui a pour objectif la formation des paysans et paysannes du milieu andin colombien aux méthodologies et techniques de recherche en sciences sociales.

101 Technologies

Pour le Sud par le Sud

Dans 101 Technologies, le Centre de recherches pour le développement international condense 20 années de recherches et d'inventions, fruit du travail des scientifiques les plus novateurs de l'hémisphère Sud.

L'ouvrage, qui regroupe un ensemble de fiches techniques, présente à la fois des technologies « dures » qui vont de la mise au point de dessaleurs à énergie solaire et de minidécorctiqueurs à grain, et des technologies « douces » telles que la vulgarisation et les services de formation en milieu rural. Chaque technologie fait l'objet d'une fiche technique qui en décrit l'évolution, les préalables et les applications éventuelles. Il fournit également une liste de contacts utiles.

101 Technologies est une mine de renseignements sur les technologies appropriées dans les domaines de l'agriculture, de l'éducation, de l'environnement, de la santé, de l'information et des communications.

Pour l'amour de la Terre

Rapport de la Commission sur les pays en développement et les changements de l'environnement planétaire Pauvreté, inégalité, dépendance : catalyseurs des maux économiques et sociaux du Tiers-Monde; réchauffement planétaire, épuisement de la couche d'ozone, disparition de la forêt humide : images de la crise de l'environnement planétaire; y a-t-il un lien? La clé du sauvetage de l'environnement réside-t-elle dans les principes du développement durable?

Oui. Le véritable dénouement de la crise de l'environnement planétaire, c'est l'éradication du paupérisme et de l'inégalité. C'est un transfert efficace de systèmes et de technologies appropriés reposant sur le savoir. C'est une prise de décisions en toute démocratie. Les problèmes du Nord continuent à dominer le programme environnemental. Mais la voix du Sud doit se faire entendre. Les questions du réchauffement planétaire et de la perte de diversité biologique n'ont guère de sens pour des gens qui souffrent tous les jours de la faim, de la malnutrition ou de l'absence de services sanitaires de base. Les priorités du Sud, qu'il soit question de dégradation des ressources, de pollution ou de catastrophes naturelles, sont des questions immédiates de vie ou de mort. Elles sont souvent liées au cadre politique et économique international. Ce sont là des problèmes planétaires qui exigent une solution planétaire.

Cette publication engage un dialogue capable de transformer le programme environnemental en un programme planétaire visant à l'équité, au développement et à une écologie durable.

La Commission est formée des sept scientifiques suivants oeuvrant dans le domaine des sciences sociales : Anil Agarwal (Inde), Julia Carabias (Mexique), Martin Khor Kok Peng (Malaysia), Adolfo Mascarenhas (Tanzanie), Thandika Mkandawire (Sénégal), Alvaro Soto (Colombie) et Erna Witoelar (Indonésie).

Investigación en Sistemas de Salud

Volumen 1 — Promoción de la Investigación en Sistemas de Salud (ISS) como Instrumento de Gestión
por Ann Brownlee

El Volumen 1, para los formuladores de política, se centra en la necesidad de promover los usos de la ISS como instrumento de gestión. Se describen las estrategias para promover la ISS entre los formuladores de política y gerentes superiores. En base a un análisis de experiencias en los países en desarrollo durante la década pasada, este volumen presenta un resumen de cómo la ISS puede dar lugar a mejores decisiones y cómo se puede estimular el desarrollo de un eficaz programa de investigación a nivel nacional.

Volumen 2 — Concepción y Ejecución de Proyectos de Investigación en Sistemas de Salud: Partes 1 & 2

por Corlien M. Varkevisser, Indra Pathmanathan y Ann Brownlee

El Volumen 2, en formato modular, es la piedra angular dado que trata del desarrollo, paso a paso, de una propuesta de ISS y de las pruebas de campo (Parte 1), y del análisis de datos y redacción de informes (Parte 2). Los participantes en el curso seleccionarán, preferiblemente con antelación al curso, los problemas prioritarios de salud que son específicos de sus propias situaciones y que no pueden resolverse a menos que se recopile un mayor volumen de información. En la mayoría de los casos, un equipo formado por participantes en el curso llevará a cabo la investigación contemplada conjuntamente con sus obligaciones ordinarias. Después se programa un segundo taller para proporcionar información sobre el análisis de los datos, redacción de informes, y utilización de los resultados. Este volumen será de interés a todos los grupos identificados como objetivo, y especialmente para aquellos gerentes de servicios de cuidados de salud e investigadores que deseen llevar a cabo proyectos de ISS.

Trabajo informal y pobreza en América Latina

publicado bajo la dirección de François Bélisle

En las últimas décadas, América Latina se ha enfrentado a una tasa de urbanización elevada, la cual ha llevado al surgimiento de pequeñas actividades de subsistencia, a menudo autocreadas y caracterizadas por una tecnología de producción muy rudimentaria, conformando el llamado sector informal urbano.

Este libro sintetiza los resultados de varios proyectos de investigación sobre distintos aspectos del sector informal urbano en América Latina. La meta de dicha investigación fue contribuir tanto al desarrollo de la capacidad investigativa nacional como a la producción de resultados para que generen un mayor conocimiento de la realidad e influyan sobre el proceso de desarrollo. Este volumen abre nuevas puertas a uno de los temas más importantes de la actualidad latinoamericana. Interesará a estudiantes, académicos y profesionales que intentan mejorar las condiciones de trabajo en este importante sector de la sociedad.

Métodos sensoriales básicos para la evaluación de alimentos

El análisis sensorial es una ciencia multidisciplinaria en la que se utilizan panelistas humanos que usan los sentidos de la vista, olfato, gusto, tacto y oído para medir las características sensoriales y la aceptabilidad de los productos alimenticios y de muchos otros materiales.

Este manual sirve de guía técnica básica para métodos de evaluación sensorial. Discute principios de análisis sensorial, describiendo instalaciones y procedimientos para este análisis, y presenta ejemplos de tratamiento estadístico de los datos provenientes de los ensayos sensoriales. Será útil para una amplia variedad de lectores, incluyendo investigadores, estudiantes, agencias de control gubernamentales y otras personas que tienen como objetivo lograr que se produzcan y utilicen alimentos de manera más eficiente y eficaz dentro del contexto de preferencias y requisitos claramente identificados por los consumidores.
